CRUD stands for Create, Read, Update and Delete. But what's the difference between these four operations? *Create - this is the process of putting data into the system. Typically, you will call a function like save() or insert() on the database object. *Read - this is the process of reading data from the database. *Update - this is the process of making changes to data in the database. If it's updating a row, then it's using a WHERE clause to specify what you want. If it's updating a column, it might be using SET. *Delete - this is the process of removing data from the database. It's typically a DELETE FROM... Access 2000 Database About this download Installed updates and New Features
